The Newest Embroidery Designs

The style of work, familiarly known to our mothers and grandmothers as English embroidery or stiletto work, is now revived and there is nothing more exclusive or up-to-date at the present time.

The designs are simply rich, attractive and fascinating.

Another newly revived embroidery, now very popular, derives its name Mountmellick from a town in Ireland, where the work originated in a convent and has reached high perfection. It is durable, rich and effective.

Hardanger is still another effective and fascinating form of embroidery. It originated in the Norse town of Hardanger and is especially rich and quaint.

A splendid assortment of all three of the above mentioned embroideries now on display in the middle aisle upstairs.

First Act Rehearsal Mother Goose Play

The first stage rehearsal in the Opera House of "The House That Jack Built" was held last night. The children and principals went through the first act with the orchestra. The whole program was carried through like clock work. One of the most remarkable features of the whole thing is the control Miss Martin has over the two hundred wriggling noisy, excited but gay hearted children.

A blast from the whistle and chaos becomes order and the show begins. There is everything to please the person who loves children and bright music, in the "House That Jack Built." The choruses are remarkably strong and the principals are all equal to their parts. An evening of solid enjoyment in a veritable fairy land is in store for those who attend the operetta Saturday night.

The rehearsal of the second act will be held tonight and Friday afternoon the final dress rehearsal of the whole piece will be held.
